WASHINGTON, Jan. 10 (R) -- Secretary of State Alexander Field left today for Brussels for a special meeting tomorrow of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) foreign ministers. Mr. Haig said last week he wanted the meeting to state clearly that the Soviet Union was responsible for the Polisb crisis. He is anxious for NATO to present a united front in the face of the military crackdown in Poland and hopes for a convergence of views between the U.S. and its European allies. Mr. Haig is expected to hold a press conference after tomorrow's meeting and to make a speech on Tuesday dealing with the Western alliance and the Polish situation. He is later due to fly to the Middle East for talks with the leaders of Israel and Egypt.

Lis David Madlar Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN - A recentlycompleted research project indicates that phosphate spillage from loading facilities at the port of Aqaba is causing serious damage in marine life. The research was carried out over the past three years by Dr. Fuad Hashwa from the University of Jordan. It was financed by a $28,000 grant from the Ford Foundation, and by the Jordan Phosphate Mines Company.

According to Dr. Hashwa, the results indicate that a portion of the raw phosphate which is loaded onto ships in bulk falls into the sea, causing irreversible barmful effects on the marine environment in the Gulf of Aqaba. The phosphate dust causes water turbidity and permanent clouds of dust in the air, he said. When it settles down, it forms a black sediment which "definitely" affects the marine life in the loading area, he asserted.

"But" he added, "we are lucky that the phosphate pollution, if we may call it so, has only affected a restricted area of the Gulf."

Dr. Hashwa warned, however. that increased amounts of phosphate dust falling into the waters would eventually affect a greater portion of the marine ecosystem in

In the 1,000-square-metre phosphare loading area, the phosphate dust loaded onto ships by means of conveyor helts has become a major source of pollution, and sediments of pure phosphate dust have been formed, causing increased microhial activity.

Dr. Hashwa pointed out that while the amount of phospbate dust passing through the loading area has increased due to increased exports, there has so far heen no improvement in loading facilities. He added that the shore near the loading area is completely covered with a thick layer of phosphate dust, thus preventing the growth of trees.

But the very good circulation of the water in the gulf has helped flush the coast and restricted the pollution to a small area. Dr. Hashwa said. Yet, "It could well spread out in no time, especially since the phosphate exports will increase in the future," he said.

He also warned against other pollutants in the area. The materials to be handled and produced by the Jordan Fertiliser Industry Company's (JFIC's) new factory are considered major potential sources of marine poliution, he

The JFIC factory would pose a special problem, he said, since it will be producing fluorine, which he called "one of the most toxic materials, affecting all sorts of living microorganisms.

JFIC has spent hundreds of thousands of dinars on pollution control, and plans to construct an associated plant to utilise the fluorine, preventing pollution. It will produce aluminium fluoride, which can be sold abroad for use in aluminium smelting.

Dr. Hashwa urged all parties concerned to take greater care for the unique marine environment in Agaoa, which has some of the cleanest waters in the world. He maintained that no poliutants, whether industrial or natural, have yet affected the quality of the waters there. And what sets the gulf apart is the fact that it has the bestdeveloped coral reefs in the northern bemisphere. Dr. Hasbwa said that the clarity of Anaba's water makes it possible for the coral to live there, "and the introduction of any amount of pollutants might have adverse effects on this ecosystem."

The recent research involved both field and laboratory experimentation. What made the feldwork difficult, yet interesting, was the fact that in the close vicinity of the phosphate loading area a sewage pipe has been discharging untreated domestic waste into the sea.

Dr. Hashwa explained that this discharge causes the spread of an intolerable smell in the air, contaminates the waters and supplies them with nutrients like phosphates, ammonia and nitrates. which eventually affect the ecosystem. The effluent flow from the sewage pipes not only affects the quality of the waters in the long run, Dr. Hashwa said, but is also hazardous to swimmers.

Since we only have a limited shoreline providing the country with a nice touristic area, we have to make a compromise so that industry does not flourish at the expense of our local resources." Dr. Hashwa said.

He said that since phosphates take a long time to dissolve, the tesearchers could not find any adverse effects on the ecosystem away from the loading area. "But the whole balance of the eccsystem could be toopled with increasing amounts of pollutants which are bound to be dumped into the sea, especially with the expansion in industrial projects near Aqaba," he said.

In order to avoid regrettable developments in the Gulf of Aoaba, Dr. Hashwa recommended that changes should be required in the open loading tecliniques now used, to prevent phosphate podution.

Now, after nearly 10 years of rapid growth in the industrial sector, skilled labourers, technicians, engineers and other professionals are more in demand. Actually, demand for them is so great that many can be "choosy", in the sense that they can work in neighbouring countries where high pay has lured many to leave for the lands of opportunities."

On the local scene, the proliferation of development plans has snawned more job opportunities. The new five-year plan (1981-1985) alone is estimated to provide for a total of 254,000 new joh openings. The projected numher is so high that officials here intend to continue with their long-term policy of importing foreign manpower to help meet the demands of the growing industry. The vast opportunities for work have been compounded by a change in the social outlook.

Among the "elite" and middle-calss, engineers, doctors. pharmacists and businessmen are preferred, and among the poorer section of the Jordanian society. most young men take on vocations that are likely to bring in quick economic returns to help support the large families. Now, instead of hearing the question, "what do you do?" "one often hears," how much do you earn?"

The impact of development plans has reached the rural areas, where the descendants of generations of farming families have left their land to seek higher wages and more opportunities in urban areas. To meet the great need for manpower in the country, many institutions have focused their artention on training the young. The first government institution to venture into this field was the Ministry of Education, which opened an industrial school in the early 1920s. Last year, community colleges unanimously decided to gear their programmes towards more vocational-oriented studies. And. both Jordanian universities have made it a point to open new doors for the young generation. The medicine, pharmacy, engineering and architecture departments at both universities are flooded with hundreds of applications each year, and many have to be turned

Apart from the Ministry of Education and the two universities, the Vocational Training Corporation (VTC), established in 1976, has taken the responsibility to produce skilled and efficient labourers ready to work in or outside Jordan.

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA) has also played a role in helping the country meet the growing demand for labour. Its two centres near Amman boast of graduating generations of skilled technicians and labourers.

The Jordanian Armed Forces also vouches for a great number of Jordan's skilled labourers, and its programmes have won it the higbest esteem,

The industrial boom has made it clear to planners in Jordan that vocational training should be a priority. Now, efforts are concentrated to induce more females to join vocational training programme -- not an easy task by any means, since the Jordanian social structure still finds it unsunable for a girl to undertake what has been traditionally considered a man's job. But, indications are that a change is brewing up in the air, since some girls have already ventured into the field.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a six-part series in which Dina Matar reports in depth on vocational training in Jordan. In today's article, the writer examines the shift in social attitudes on vocations as a result of development and categorises the various level of occupations accepted in Jordan.

In Jordan, vocations are categorised according to the levels of skill. There are professionals, technicians, craftsmen, skilled workers and limited-skill workers. Each level corresponds to a special type of training. According to VTC Director Munther Al Masri, the professional level corresponds to a university degree: the technician level to a community college degree, which -- irrespective of the specialisation - takes up to two years spent at a community college after secondary school: the craftsman level corresponds to a three-year secondary programme provided in Jordan's industrial and other secondary schools: the skilled labour level corresponds to two or three years of intensive training, usually carried out in many vocational training centres in the

Mr. Masri explained that the duration of the course is not the real criterion. "The craftsman level is naturally a more balanced type of education," Mr. Masri told the Jordan Times, "since the trainces spend 40 per cent of their schooling in practical training and the rest is allocated to technical theory, pure science, and general cultural programmes." The skilled labour level "emphasises practical training, taking up about 60 per cent of the two-year course, he Mr. Masri said that craftsmen.

on the other hand, have more chances of mobility, since those who join the course have acquired higher educational standards.

Trainees who join the skilledfeel they cannot cope with academic subjects, and those who want quick academic returns, he

The last category, but not the least in its numbers, is the limited-skill level, which comprises 100 per cent practical training. "This exists only on the joh: institutions don't undertake training programmes for this level," Mr. Masri said, "and it usually comprises dropouts from compulsory schools in the country."

One, however, might look at vocational training from another perspective -- identification by means of its various fields of spe cialisation. There is the industrial sector, comprising engineering, construction and electrical power training programmes: the agricultural sector and the services sector which includes paramedical, secretarial and office work programmes, Mr. Masri

A third way of categorising vocational training is by determining whether it is done institutionally or on the job. "In the institutional type, the trainee is a full-time student, who has very little to do with employment: He acquires his practical skills in the school or centre. In the other type, called in-plant training, the traince is more or less employed. In other words, inplant training is called on-the-job training," Mr. Masri said.

Where professionals and technicians are concerned, Jordan is exclusively institutional. The inplant system, however, is still young. It was initiated only five years ago at the VTC, and makes use of institutional centres in the country. "This is done with the cooperation of the Ministry of Education," Mr Masri pointed out, adding that Jordan has been a pioneer in this aspect, "since this exoperation offers an integrated approach to the preparation of manpower in the country." Although Jordan has achieved a great deal in its vocational training programmes, the fact that any educational practical policy needs at least ten years to reap the projected results has been one of the bottlenecks of vocational training.

Labour mobility -- considered a sacred right for every labourer -has brought on some negative consequences. Many industries suffer from the noticeable turnover rate, which is due to the migration of labourers to nearby countries where the pay is more

But, government officials cannot do anything about it, because if the outflux were to be restricted for one reason or another, Jordan would be faced with a surplus in its working corps, while Jordan would need another ten years to meet the requirements of its development projects, if doors were left open for labourers to leave.

Mr. Masri summed it up by saying: "It is a vicious circle. We cannot stop the outflux and, at the same time, we need to import foreign manpower to satisfy the country's needs."

When it all started in the 1970s. vocational training was still unpopular and considered menial. But, the initiation of development plans has toppled the social standards. Now, vocational training is actually "prestigious."

American feminist offers ideas on equality for women in 1980s

By Samira Kawar

Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN - Dr. Donna E. Shalala, the youngest president ever of the 110-year old Hunter Col-lege in New York City, told an audience of 50 women on Saturday afternoon that women who are in positions of power should actively participate in achieving equality for other women.

Dr. Shalala was giving a lecture on the role of women in the 1980s at the invitation of the Jordanian Women's Union. She said that speaking from the point of view of an American woman in power, she felt that most feminist views are expressed by women who are out

Two basic premises underlie the discussion of the role of women in the 1980s, she said. The first is that strategies made for and by women who have attained to pos-itions of power, and are hence able to influence women's issues, should be more "comprehensive" to enable them to carry more weight. The second premise relating to enhancing the role of women in public life in the 1980s is that women in power cannot be considered to have made any significant feminist achievements, if they do not exert any efforts to help other women to advance both collectively and individually.

To areas that must be central to any discussion of this subject are education and work, Dr. Shalala said. She stressed that any changes in favour of women in these two areas would in no way detract from the role of Arab women in the family.

Referring to the difficulties faced by working women all over the world, she pointed out that although more women were joining the workforce, they are assigned less well-paid jobs than men, often receiving lower salaries than men for the same job. This, she said, has served to put world below the poverty line, so that the problems of women and poverty go hand-in-hand.

As an indication of the trend among U.S. women towards joining the workforce, Dr. Shalala said that now only 16 per cent of U.S. households are conventional 'nuclear' families, in which the wife remains in the home without taking up employment. Nevertheless, she said, there has not been enough change on the professional scene to enable many women to get well-paid, challenging and promising jobs.

Most women, Dr. Shalala said, still get "dead-end, low-level jobs with few chances of promotion."It is here that Dr. Shalala feels that women who have attained positions of power and responsibility can help, by pressing for legal reforms and organisational restructuring to offer women equal professional opportunities.

Married women with family responsibilities are often discriminated against professionally because of their family commitments, Dr. Shalala said. On the other hand, professionally dedicated women are often accused. by their families of neglecting their home obligations. Those who manage to keep up with both professional and family commitments often do so at their own personal expense, and end up by being accused all round of "letting themselves go." Dr. Shalala said. Reform the workplace

According to Dr. Shalala, the answer to this dilemma lies in reforms at work, so that family ties and work commitments do not compete, but go hand-in-hand. She expressed the opinion that places of employment should be organised in such a way as to provide comfort leisure and facilities such as day-care centres, so that family commitments will not lead to the "professional paralysis" of working wives and mothers. "It is the workplace that should reform, women throughout the not women," Dr. Shalala said.

ability to enhance the role of women in the 1980s, Dr. Shalala said that educational systems around the world should be more sensitive to women's: needs. She said older women should be given opportunities to obtain higher education, pointing ont that the student body of 18,000 at Hunter College included 500 women over 65 years old.

She deplored role stereotyping m school textbooks, and said that she is working to eliminate male and female occupational sterectypes from school education. She gave equal importance to her efforts to include women leaders and historical figures in history textbooks, to make the younger generation receptive to the concept of women attaining positions of authority.

After Dr. Shalala spoke, the floor was open to discussion, and the audience eagerly questioned her on her views. Minister of Social Development In am Al Mufti asked Dr. Shalala for suggestions on the idea of getting married women jobs in fields that are short on staff through introducing flexible part-time schedules. Dr. Shalala said joh cycles could be changed to accommodate married women. A part-time schedule that would accommodate a young mother's family commitments could later be changed to a fulltime schedule once her children were of school-going age, she poi-

With regard to education and its being president of the coeducational Hunter College, she is also principal of the Hunter ele-

Her current visit is partly for tourstic purposes, but will also enable her to meet Jordanian women to discuss issues of concern to the women's movement everywhere.

There is no inconsistency between equality for women and the family as an institution, she asserted. The changes that would be introduced due to the achievement of equality for women might lead to changes in manwoman relationships as well as in society at large, she said; but described such changes as part of the dynamic change that affects society for the better.

Good luck

THE AGREEMENT between the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen -- more commonly referred to as North and South Yemen -- on a draft constitution as the basis of merging the two states into a single country will be greeted by both satisfaction and scepticism in the Arab World. The satisfaction stems from the feeling that the initial path towards greater coordination and cooperation among the individual Arab states seems, to pass naturally through small-scale, localised integration efforts such as this. The scepticism derives from the chronic inability of attempts of this sort to survive past the incubation stage. The two Yemens have been talking about unification for more years that we would like to recall. Yet we are certain that we reflect the feelings of the overwhelming majority of Arabs when we say that this latest attempt deserves the support and encouragement of all people in the

The interesting trend that has developed in the past decade has been to institute people-to-people ties among Arab states that have proved themselves virtually impervious to subsequent political differences among the countries involved. This is a sign of political maturity and farsightedness that should augur well for the future of the Arab World and all of us who believe in the concept of Arabism and unified Arab action. We hope the leaders of all the people of Yemen continue on the same road that others have travelled before them, and build upon the lessons of the past by starting with practical, realistic policies that can be expanded and strengthened in the future.

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

History may repeat itself

AL DUSTOUR: The Italian foreign minister ended his talks and discussions with Jordanian officials yesterday. When he met with His Maiesty King Hussein he understood the hopes Jordan pins on the European Community's support for the efforts to establish a peace based on justice. He also realised that Jordan expects Italy to do its best in crystallising a new European stand and in preventing an explosion in the region. Italy and its partners understand that if such an explosion takes place Europe will be the first to be harmed by its results.

The Italian foreign minister has stressed that Italy is committed to the Venice Declaration hut this statement does not relieve Italy from exerting efforts to convince the rest of the European Community of returning to the spirit of the Venice Declaration in dealing with the crux of the issue, namely the Palestinian issue and the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. This is the crux of the conflict which international Zionism is trying to press all international parties not to deal with. International Zionism is doing its best not to permit the international community to deal with the issue in light of the values and the principles upon which the United Nations was founded—the principles and values which guarantee the peoples right to self-determination.

Europe, like the Arab World, is suffering from division and foreign influence. Europe has had historical ties with the Arab World. These ties have been important for both the Arabs and the Europeans.

Historians say that Arab civilisation entered Europe through the Italian islands. Is there a chance for history to repeat itself? Will Europe understand the rights of the Arabs and its commitment thereto through Italy? We hope that the reversal of the French stand will not impose a setback on the other contacts and dialogues established between Europe and the Arab World.

Italy can save the day

AL RA'I: The Jordanian-Italian talks, held on the occasion of the visit paid to Jordan by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, were of a unique standard expressing the good relations that link the two friendly countries.

The Italian minister was briefed by His Majesty King Hussein on the firm Arab stand. The King reviewed the development of the Palestinian issue and its importance as a central issue and the indispensible principles for establishing the just and comprehensive peace in the region. The King also spoke about the importance of the Italian role in bringing about a European effort, thus stressing the Arab view of what Italy can do, within the framework of the European group, in order to move Europe towards the establishment of real peace in the region and the consolidation of the European understanding that the aggressive Israeli practices will not affect the Arabs only but the Europeans

It is only fair to say that the Italian minister's assurance that Italy and the European Community are committed to the Venice Declaration must be looked at as an Italian effort to alleviate the Arah anxiety caused by the statements of French Minister of External Affairs Claude Cheysson when he visited Israel.

But the fact remains that the European Community is called upon to put the effort into practice in order to strengthen the Arah confidence in the European role.

The Jordanian-Italian relations have been characterised by mutual trust and respect. They have the chance to grow now, particularly by Italy's participation in Jordan's development projects.

These positive relations and Italy's role in crystallising a positive European stand will have a good influence on Italian-Arab relation in the Arah region.

Readings in the 1982 Government budget

By T.A. Jaber

The 1982 budget of the Jordan Government was approved last week by the relevant authorities. Thus, we have started our fiscal year on time with a development-oriented expansionary budget.

In Jordan, as in many other developing countries, the government budget is the most important annual economic document in terms of its weight and widespread effect on the national economic activities. It reveals many government policies and actions during the year under consideration.

Among such policies include taxation, foreign and local borrowing, expansion of government services, level of employment in the government machinery, developmental expenditures, major development projects, deficit financing, inflationary impact, and others.

One can even calculate from the budget document the number of cars to be purchased by the government, the number of schools, clinics and offices to be built, the length of new roads, additional computer facilities, and many other detailed information which are useful for economic analysis and which provide a summary of business possibilities for private enterprises.

Accordingly, the 1982 hudget should be duly assessed. An additional justification for its importance is the fact that the budget comes as the first one to be formulated in the light of the second five-year development plan 1981-85 and thus reflects the plan's priorities and magnitude and thus reflects the plan's priorities and magnitude.

We recall that the plan was not adopted on time hut rather delayed for a full year. Since we consider in Jordan that the government budget stands for the annual development plan, the 1981 budget was prepared in the absence of the five-year plan but on the basis of on-going

What more can we read in the 1982 budget?

When discussing a hudget, one is tempted to consider first its volume. The volume of hudget has been increasing in the last few years at a rate higher than the rate of inflation. The 1982 budget amounts to $2.4 billion and increased by 20 per cent over the previous year. Taking the average rate of inflation of 10 per cent annually, this year's budget records a real increase of the same rate.

Distinction should be made between the consumption and the investment portions of the hudget. While current expenditure is rising by 16 per cent, capital expenditure increases by 26 per cent, representing another favourable trend in the government fiscal polic;

The present hudget classification does not end itself to a direct identification of the developmental expenditures. This requires a detailed study of each item and a reclassification which a researcher can do with after making assumptions.

However, an approximate figure for such expenditure can be derived from the total capital spending minus repayments of dehts. The resulting amount of JD 331 million comes very close to the government investment commitment in the plan. This is also another positive aspect of the 1982 hudget.

The Jordanian Government's capacity to generate local revenues is remarkable. An increasing portion of the current expenditure is being met hy local revenues, a target which has been always in the minds of policymakers. However, the income tax estimates are still below our potential and some modern techniques should be used to gather more information on taxable incomes. Custom revenues move almost in regression with the value of imports.

Revenue transfers from the Central Bank are the third most important local source. If we also take into account the Bank's advances of JD 100 million to the government and its portfolio of treasury bills and bonds, the Bank stands as a major financier of the treasury.

Another trend that can be noted in the budget is the large capital allocation for the public corporations and institutions vis-a-vis the government ministries and department except ministries of public works, transport and finance. For the last ministry, the bulk of its capital allocations are geered towards debt repayments and financial contributions to other agencies. No wonder then to note the pressure to branch out of the government direct machinery into public corporations.

The budget continues also to have a physical bias, namely, the allocation of increasing funds for the sectors and projects which involve construction and the purchase of materials and equipments. While on the other hand, it does not offer new inducements to attract and retain the needed qualified personnel.

Of course, the wage bill is a major component in the hudget, but the quality of government services needs more attention, even if it was at the expense of some physical accumulation.

There is a lot to read in the hudget document. One may concentrate on its developmental impact, its subsidy content, its deficit, its dichotomy... etc. In this commentary, I have touched on some of its overall aspects.

Arab views on security

By Dr. Khalil Salim

The following article is adapted from a lecture delivered by the author in Rome last month at an international conference organised by the Financial Times newspaper of London. The conference, to discuss global economic and political issues, was attended by senior government officials and private sector leaders from Europe, North America and the Third World. Dr. Khalil Salim was asked to address the gathering in his capacity as Secretary General of the Arab Thought Forum, the pan-Arab research institute recently established with its headquarters in Amman. Dr. Salim is General Manager of the Arab Finance Corporation (Jordan) and a member of the National Co-1sultative Council.

I am no expert on "Security" in the Middle East, but I would like to share with you a layman's understanding of the "Security Prohlem" in simple language which does not lend itself to the jargon of strategists or militarists.

May I contend, first, that security is a state of mind; it is a function of peace. People or states in the Middle East might enjoy a sense of security if they were given the opportunities to exercise their independence, freedom and human rights, and to labour for their development and well-being in their homelands, within recognised and secure borders, free from internal or external threats. This sense of security is the firmest foundation for building the present and shaping the future in the interest of the people, the state and the world at large.

In application of this general definition of security, I would suggest to you that the dominant recognises to you that the dominant recognises.

In application of this general definition of security, I would suggest to you that the dominant reality in the M.E. today is Israel's false security based on militaristic supremacy and the denial of security to the Palestinians and the neighbouring Arab States. Jordan has tried in the past ten years to spearhead the Arab efforts towards a peaceful settlement based on mutual acceptance and recognition by both parties, which is the only foundation for real security.

May I contend, secondly, that in the recent history of the Middle East, we can delineate two serious Western commitments: a commitment to the security of Israel at the expense of Palestinian security, and a commitment to the security of the flow of oil from the Middle East to the West. I shall deal with each of these commitments separately, inspite of the fact that they sometimes converge to represent two sides of the same 1917 was the earliest Western commitment to the establishment to a Jewish national home in Palestine. Unjust as it was, the Declaration took notice of the fact that the Jewish people in Palestine were less than 5% of the total number of Palestinian Arabs and owned less than 2% of the land.

The Balfour Declaration in

The Declaration stipulated: "it being understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine".

The three decades of the British Mandate in Palestine witnessed all kinds of prejudiced and discriminatory measures against the Palestinian Arabs in favour of transforming the "national home" into a "national state". The repercussions of the British policies in Palestine were eloquently described by the Right Honourable Mr. Ernest Bevin, then Foreign Secretary, in the House of Commons debate on Jan. 26, 1949. He said: "The (Palestinian) Arabs feel as profoundly as the Jews that in the problem of Palestine, right is on their side. They consider that for the Arab population, which has been occupying Palestine for more than 20 centuries, to he turned out of their lands and homes to make way for another race is a profound injustice. We understand how this strikes the Arabs, all the Arab people, not only their Governments, and we should consider how the British people would have reacted if a similar demand had been on us. Suppose we had been asked to give up a slice of Scotland, Wales or Cornwall to another race, and the present inhabitants had been compelled to make way. I think there, might have been trouble in this House, and possibly outside.....

"The (Palestinian) Arabs believe that for what they regard as a new and an alien state to be carved out of Arab Land by a foreign force, against the wishes and over the protests of the inhabitants, is a profound injustice. The (Palestinian) Arabs helieve that it is contrary to the right of selfdetermination and to the principles of the United Nations. I am giving the House and the conntry their arguments, because there is so much propaganda on the other side, and I think h is sometimes forgotten that the (Palestinian) Arabs are in the world. They point to the fact that since Britain gave up the man-date... 500,000 (Palestinian) Arabs have been driven from their homes. In Jaffa, which was an Arab town of 70,000 allotted to the (Palestinian) Arabs by the Assembly Resolution of 1947, there are now, so I am informed, only 5000 Arabs... .

"The fact is that 500,000 (Palestinian) Arabs are gone; they are refugees, and I do not think they walked out voluntarily..... Do let us be fair and just. If we proceed on those lines, then I think that in the end we shall get a solution, but I must state the facts and the fact is that there are over 500,000 (Palestinian) Arab refugees, and the marvel to me is that the conscience of the world has been so little stirred over that tragedy. I hate the refugee problem. I think that the driving of poor innocent people from their homes, whether it is in Germany by Hitler, or by anybody else, and making the ordinary working people of the place suffer. is a crime, and we really ought to join together to stop it if we can."

The United States was the first to recognise the new state of Israel "carved out of Arah land" and to extend to it moral, economic and military aid. Israel was always portraved as the small peace-loving country in a vast, antagonistic Arab World. It was the underdog, and as such, it was accorded overwhelming sympathy and support. To protect its people from imaginary Arab threats, and to ensure, at all times, its military supremacy, Israel was provided with arsenals of armaments and with the most modern technological devices and weapons. In its wars with the Arabs, which Israel started under different pretexts, it came out victorious; it exploited its victories to expand the territories allotted to it under the U.N. Resolutions which created Israel. Now, Israel occupies the total area of Palestine. In addition, Israel occupies Egyptian, Syrian and Lebanese territories. Where are the three and a half million Palestinians descendents of the "non-Jewish communities" who inhahited Palestine and owned its land in 1917? If the R.H. Mr. Bevin were alive today, he would be shocked to see, thirty years later, the serious aggravation of this tragedy. The number of Palestinian refugees and displaced persons has doubled; at least two million Palestinians are in diaspora. Arah Palestinians in Israel are treated as second or third class citizens.

Arab Palestinians in East Jerusalem, the West Bank and Gaza are denied, under Israeli occupation, their human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Israeli Military Authorities demolisb Palestinians' homes, expropriate their lands, close their schools and universities, suppress their cultural identity, defame their holy places, shoot their school children, imprison their young and old, torture men and women, deport their leaders from their homeland and massacre innocent people by massive land and air raids. All these criminal acts, in a cruelly ironic way reminiscent of the Nazis', are committed in the name of Israeli security. The mushrooming of settlements in the Occupied Territories is reconciled by the same

If any Palestinian rebels against these oppressive measures, and tries to call the attention of the world's conscience to his existence, plight and rights, he is lab-elled a "terrorist" and stigmatised with all the horrors and evils of terrorism. Under other circumstances, such a revolutionary is called a "liberator" or a "freedom fighter". The irony of the matter is the refusal of Mr. Begin or Mr. Shamir to meet with Mr. Arafat, as though the world has totally forgotten Mr. Begin's association with Deir Yassin's massacre, or the blowing up of the King David Hotel, or the ass-assination of Lord Moyne and Count Bernadotte, or so many other acts of Zionist terror in the 1930's and 1940's that launched the modern era of violence in Palestinian leaders, intellectuals and journalists, by Mossad the Israeli Intelligence Agency, are not "terrorist" crimes, they are sheer defences of Israel's security. Israel has the guts to use the same justification for flying American planes to bomhard school children in Egypt, or the nuclear reactor in Baghdad, or ordinary civilians in Beirut. With the United State's support, Israel's arm has become very long, and I do not think that an even-handed American policy can twist it.

The liquidation of so many Pal-

We are told by an Israeli expert, that "occasionally Begin lapses into the jargon of "security" as a rationale for Israeli possession of the occupied territories, thereby hlurring the bistorical grounds of his policy. It is true that Begin does believe that the security of Israel requires the holding of these territories, hut... he refers to the security of "Eretz Israel" and not the Israel of the pre-1967 'green line'. He needs to hold onto the West Bank and Gaza in order to maintain the security of Israel. of which the West Bank and Gaza are a part. With Begin, the security rationale does not therefore dislodge the more fundamental argument from historical right; it follows from it and is subordinate

With the exception of Israel and the United States, the whole family of nations have deplored the acquisition of land through military force; have recognised the plight of the Palestinian people and called for giving them the opportunity of exercising their buman rights, including the right to self-determination and establishing their state in their homeland, Palestine. Israel lends a deaf ear to such international wisdom.

Under the Camp David Agreements, the Palestinians, living under oppressive Israeli occupation, are offered "autonomy" which is proclaimed as an "autonomy applied only to the population but not the the territory". It is interpreted as the right to manage sewage systems, as not to elect representatives. It is noteworthy that after signing the agreement with Egypt, Israel stepped up both its settlements plans and military activities against the Palestinians and other Arab States. Jordan holds the view, like other Arah States, that it is the vast amount of military and economic assistance Israel receives which encourages it to pursue its belligerent and expansionist policies. The Palestinians' and Arabs' experience and apprehensions pose the question: whose security is at stake today?

Let me revert now the second Western commitment: namely to the secure flow of oil from the Middle East to Europe and the United States. This flow shall remain the major

United States.

This flow shall remain the major concern and obsession of the West for a few decades to come. I can find no better expression of this concern than President Nixon's words. He wrote: "The entire industrial economy of the West now depends on oil, and the entire military machine of the West runs on oil. Control over the West's oil lifeline is control over the West's life. Never has the region of the Persian Gulf been so vital to the future of the world...

"More than ever, the question of who controls what in the Persian Gulf and the Middle East is the key to who controls what in the

I hate this word "control" hut I shall bypass it, to make the following remarks:

1. It is appalling to see how many myths are associated with Arah oil and spread by anti-Arah propaganda. It is a myth:

- that the rise of oil prices is the cause of Western inflation & economic recessions,

- that Arab oil surpluses are hot money in the turhulent intemational money markets,

- that oil money is spent mainly on the satisfaction of Sheikhs' whims & lusts.

In this context, the Zionist organs continue to discredit the Arah image; they tell lies, swallow their lies, and, one day not very far away, will be poisoned by these

2- After Jamal Abdel Nasir nationalised the Suez Canal Co., we witnessed in the Western countries a furious uproar, insphe of the smooth & free passage of oil tankers in the Canal Later, and in collusion between Israel, France and Britain, the Suez War was waged against Egypt! On the other hand, when the East Bank of the Canal was occupied by Israel in 1967, and oil tankers had to go a long way around the cape of Africa, the Western users of the Canal & importers of oil were strangely timid and silent and huilt bigger tankers. To Israeli aggression and intransigence, the West has reacted with self-contradiction, inconsistencies and the adoption of two sets of principles for the same problem.

3- The use of oil as a "strategic weapon" is rather doomed to failure, in the short run, by sharing oil supplies and stocks, freezing of monetary reserves, cutting food, technological and arms supplies, and perhaps by the rapid dep-loyment of forces. Saudi Arabia increased its oil production to meet the actual shortage of oil supplies due to the Iranian-Iraqi war, to an extent that this war seems to be completely forgotten, if not encouraged. This should not mean that a long term option for the use of oil as a strategic weapon is not possible or cannot eff-

4-The real threats to the steady flow of oil to the West are internal and external. The internal ones are fundamentalist revolutions, like the Iranian example: local wars, like the Iraqi-Iranian war; civil disturbances, like the Lebanese example; and popular undermining of oil installations. The Palestinians' frustrations and disappointments with the partisan policies of the United States have to be reckoned with in safeguarding the steady flow of oil to the West.

The external threats can take many forms, from many sources. The Americans try to exaggerate the Soviet threat, especially after the intervention of Russian troops in Afghanistan. The Muslims and Arabs deplore this intervention, hut no Arab statesman is ready to divert his attention from real to hypothetical dangers. The Israeli opposition to the sale of AWACS points to the more serious and realistic threat to the independence, freedom and natural wealth of the Arab oil-producing countries.

b- "The defence of the Gulf (must be) left to the States of the Gulf..."

c-The Gulf States, in their tunguarantee an uninterrupted of supply to their customers...

d- To avoid any possibility of an oil emhargo, or the use of oil as a strategic economic weapon, the Super Powers, and particularly the United States, concentrate in the early and bonourable solution to the problem of Palestine....

e- As the world we live in is by no means a "Cloud Cuckooland". a Gulf States should be encouraged to call for assistance from a super or medium power if their independence and natural integrity is threatened..."

The problem of security in the Middle East is rather complex and difficult to resolve in the absence of a comprehensive, lasting and just Arab-Israeli peace in the Area. It is our ohligation to warn against a militaristic concept of security through geography and the occupation and colonisation of land. Modern technological arms render this security inadequair and charged with more risks and dangers. We must warn against security through power, supremacy in the hattlefield, nuclear options and bi-lateral pacts with external super powers. Absolute power corrupts absolutely. An arms race in the region will not only waste resources which are badly needed for development: it will involve the Middle East in any East-West confrontation, and it will put human lives & dev elopment projects at the mercy of the press of a hutton.

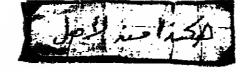

We hope to see the United States recognise the legitimate rights of the Palestinians to self-determination and statehood look to the security problem as equally reciprocal to both Israelis & Palestinians, and cut its support to Israeli aggression and expansion in teturn for which Israel could expect the only lasting form of security that is tested and sanctioned by history: security by acceptance and recognition by one's neighbours.

We hope to see Europe continue urgently to work toward a political settlement on the basis of the Venice Declaration, move from principles to their practical implementation, and provide the necessary guarantees of peace which should be specific, precise, contractual, public, automatic, reliable, reciprocal and multilateral.

These guarantees should also be positive in allaying fears of expansion, and vulnerability and mutual suspicion, according all parties a sense of security, and convincing them that their shares in the fruits of peace are fair and abundant. The Fahd Plan is an attempt towards this end.

Whether in the Middle East, Europe or the United States, man remains the center of gravity: his human rights, welfare and prosperity must remain our major

Brandt Commission pledges to bridge haves and have nots

KUWAIT, Jan. 10 (R) — The Brandt Commission on world development pledged today to continue its campaign to narrow the economic gap between the rich

Uranium: China opens the door to the W

By Alain Cass

China's decision to lift the veil of secrecy from its uranium sector and propose largescale collaboration with the West is of historic importance.

Extensive discussions have already been held with the EEC and. for the first time ever, European officials have been allowed to visit Chinese uranium mines and refining facilities.

Talks are now under way which may lead to an exchange of workers, European assistance to China in developing this strategic sector and the possible sale of Chinese uranium to the Com-

Peking's decision to embark on sucb a programme must have been painfully difficult in more ways

In the first place it drives a horse and cart through the eherished policy of self-reliance. A heady dehate is currently under way in China about the extent to which the country's drive for modernisation should be fuelled by foreign help. The issue of whether China should develop its nuclear industry and, if so, whether it should rely on Western expertise in doing so is at the heart of this deb-

The argument is not merely theoretical. China faces an energy crisis brought on by declining oil production, falling coal output and chronic inefficiency in the use of energy resources.

The World Bank estimates that oil output - around 106 million tonnes this year - could fall to 100 million in 1985 and 95 million tonnes in 1990. The decision to allow foreign companies to prospect in the South China Sea eans that the prospects for the 1990s look much brighter. Bnt the immediate future is bleak and

China could even become a net oil importer by 1990. Another powerful argument against developing nuclear power in China is the need to boost coal output. Coal contributes about 70 per cent of total commercial energy. Ontput fell to 620 million tonnes last year and, although some new investments are planned over the next five years, production is unlikely to exceed 730 million by 1990. China has buge reserves of coal hut a major spending programme will be needed to keep production at levels sufficient to fuel even a moderate rate of economic million tonnes by 1985 and 900

There are also those in China who argue that nuclear power is unsafe -- or at least not safe enough -- and that more research is needed. China bas its anti-nuclear

Perhaps the most potent argument is that developing uranium for peaceful purposes and building nuclear power stations will mevitably hand over a strategic sector to foreigners at a time when China is desperately short of foreign exchange and should be aiming at a more modest rate of economic growth firmly rooted in its own resources. The likelihood is that if China decides to push ahead with the development of its uranium sector it will do so largely for export and not for use in an expanded nuclear power programme of its own.

The plan to enlist the European Community's help in developing China's potentially buge uranium sector still has a number of hurdles to clear, hut all the signs are that both sides want it to work. A preliminary agreement may be reached when Viscount Etienne Davignon, the EEC's energy chief, visits Peking in the spring.

Despite the present glut on the world uranium market, EEC officials handling the negotiations are arguing strongly that China could become a stable, long-term supplier of reasonably cheap ura-

New oil find in Venezuela

CARACAS, Jan. 10 (A.P.) -Corpoven, a subsidiary of the narional oil monopoly Petroleos Je Venezuela, announced the discovery of a new well in a littledeveloped region just west of productive Lake Maracaibo, in western Venezuela.

The well yields 2,400 barrels per day of 26.6-degree API crude in initial tests, the company said. It added that the petroleum does not contain hydrosulphuric acid.

In the meantime, the Islamic Onaran said. Wind power energy alternative

BONN (DaD) - This wind power prototype, backed by the Bonn Ministry of Research and Tecboology, has an estimated annual output of 17-22m kilowatts. It would save the equivalent of 5,000-7,000 tons of coal and reduce dependence on ene-

British travel agent Thomas Cook is offering galactic tours, but only for those who happen to be around in the 25th century. -The firm has already issued a lavishly illustrated brochure offering what it describes as an "out of this world" holiday of a lifetime with a choice of no less than 22 interstellar stopovers.

Hotel Moonstone, for instance, offers air pressurised to the equivalent of sea level on earth, plus magnifying panoramic windows in every room and a floating balcony. And, of course, there are babysitters for the children, who will be looked after free of charge by mama robots.

You can visit Mars, or Venus. Or if you want a different winter sports boliday, you can ski on the planet Europa. Your holiday will be complete with first-class chalet accommodation and your skis will have spcial boots to adjust to the low gravity.

No ski lifts, though. Instead, at the touch of button, your galactic skis draw the snow beneath them as you glide - wait for it - upw-

The brochure warns that Pluto is only a place for loners. On Marins V, with its steamy climate, you can see the dawn in a green. And the comforts of your hotel will include 175 restaurants run exclusively by telepathic waiters, an indoor forest and sports facilities ranging from cybernetic fisbing to laser archery. Though meant for a future generation of holiday-makers, galactic tours was born of down-to-earth

"We've had people trying to register for space journeys for about 20 years," said Edmund Swinglehurst, group public relations manager for the worldwide travel firm.

Pakistan, W. Germany win Qualifying matches completed world hockey semifinals

BOMBAY, Jan. 10 (R) - West Germany scored an unexpected win over Australia on penalties in the semi-finals of the World Hockey Cup today while favourites Pakistan cruised to an easy 4-2 victory over the Netherlands. The two teams will meet in the final on Tuesday.

West Germany, down 2-1 at one stage, fought back grimly against Australia to square the match at 3-3 after two 15-minute periods of extra time. They went on to win the match on penalties, scoring eight to Australia's three.

The Australians, who outplayed West Germany for most of the match, were hitterly disappointed at the result.

Manager Alan Berry said be thought his team had played even better in extra time "but the corners did not go our way".

West Germany manager agreed that the Australians had played very well and attributed his team's

Five newcomers to World Cup finals

LONDON, Jan. 10 (R) - Qualifying matches for the 1982 World Cup soccer finals were completed today with 81 tales of crushed amhition to set against 22

A total of 103 countries competed in the qualifying toumament, seeking places alongside hosts Spain and holders Argentina in the 24-nation finals which will run from June 13 to July 11.

During nearly two years of qualifying (there were 305 matches and four walkovers), great and small alike were united in failure. The Netherlands, runners up in 1974 and 1978, could finish only fourth in their European group while Fiji were beaten 13-0 hy New Zealand, the heaviest defeat in World Cup history, as they bowed out.

land uncompromising opponents. The New Zealanders needed to beat Saudi Arabia 5-0 in their last scheduled qualifying game to force a play-off with China. They did just that and then deteated the Chinese 2-1 in Singapore today to claim the final qualifying benth.

It remains to he seen whether New Zealand's sporting links with South Africa cause problems in the coming weeks. The word boycott has already been mentioned in some quarters. New Zealand are among five newcomers to the finals, the others being Kuwait, winners of the Asia-Oceania section, African qualifiers Algeria and Cameroun. and Honduras, who with El Salvador won through from the North and Central American and Caribbean section.

Reports suggest that Honduras will.place a new star on the international foothalling stage even if their team performance causes few ripples. Their captain Ramon Maradiaga is otherwise known as 'El Primitivo' and the ruggedness implied in his nickname apparently applies to his robust and highly effective midfield game.

The International Football Federation's technical study group reported after the 16nation 1978 World Cup in Argentina that it would be advisable to reduce the number of finalists if a high standard of football were to be maintained,

But with other, more powerful pressure groups at large, their view has simply heen noted and the 1982 finals will be contested hy a record number of countries necessitating a 52-match programme compared with 38 four years ago.

The preliminary matches will be held between June 13, when holders Argentina play the opening fixture in Barcelona, and June 25. The six groups for these games will be drawn in Madrid next Saturday although there is little left to decide with all the teams having been seeded, six first seeds, six second and so on.

Considering the number of teams involved, and all the potential pitfalls and flashpoints, the organisers must be relieved that the qualifying tournament unfolded without any major prohlems. New Zealand's stubbornness forced the qualifying schedule into extra time--matches should have been completed by December 31--hut otherwise countries stuck to the timetable The absence of diplomatic ties between China and Saudi Arabia meant they met twice in Kuala Lumpur, while Costa Rica refused to travel to troubled El Salvador and conceded the match 2-0. In Africa, Egypt reached the last eight without playing a match after walkovers against Ghana and Lihya. while Uganda withdrew from their match against Madagascar.

Violence broke out in Malta where a match against Poland was ahandoned when spectators stoned officials and the referee and linesmen for the New Zealand-Kuwait match in Auckland ran a gauntles of abuse and debris when the vishors won.

England's supporters enhanced their reputation for loutishness before, during and after the match against Switzerland in Basle last May and Spanish officials could have been excused a sigh of apprebension when the English team slipped into the finals. In Basle. the England fans indulged in fighting on the terraces and looting in

But mostly it was the football that made the news. Former champions West Germany and Brazil reached the finals by winning all their gualifying games, the Germans with the extravagant record of 33 goals for and three against.

Peru showed that seasoned skills can be as effective as youth venerable team, led by 38year-old Hector Chumpitaz, eliminated much-trumpeted Uruguay who earlier in the year had won the Gold Cup for past and present world champions.

The Soviet Union raised the prospect of a communist country winning the World Cup for the first time by dominating their group. They have brilliant attackers such as Ramas Shengelia and Oleg Blokhin and a defence that conceded only two goals in eight qualifying games.

Yugoslavia, too, looked an emerging force as they finished ahead of Italy in their group. Scotland qualified for the finals for a third successive time and Belgium won the group in which France and Ireland also finished ahead of the Dutch.

With so much at stake, the tie was a scrappy affair. Steve Wooddin gave New Zealand the lead after 24 minutes and Wynton Rufer, a teenage striker on leave from English club Norwich City, made it 2-0 two minutes into the second half.

Huang Xiangdong scored from a free kick for China after 75 minutes and New Zealand defended desperately in the closing minutes to preserve their lead.

New Zealand played 15 matches, more than any other country, to reach the finals as runners up to Kuwait in the Asia-Oceania section.

Their tally of 44 goals, which included a record 13-0 win over Fiji, was the high aggregate of the qualifying competition.

But the rich harvest, following drought-stricken crops in 1979 and 1980, would have little effect on heroin markets in the United States and Europe, they said.

During the drought years in the Golden Triangle there was a boom in heroin production in Southwest Asia - Iran, Afghanistan, Pakistan, a spokesman for the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) said.

"At least 75 per cent of the heroin now reaching the U.S. and Europe is from Southwest Asia. The connections for moving the Southwest Asian heroin are more orderly and dependable than those from the Golden Triangle and they aren't likely to be replaced."

In Europe, only Amsterdam, a traditional market for Golden Triangle heroin before the drought years, was bracing for the effects of the bumper crop.

A justice ministry spokesman in the Hague said that a consignment of Far East heroin stopped in Paris on Christmas Day was meant for the Netherlands.
